

The fox accepted the invitation. When he arrived at the stork's house on Monday at six o'clock, he was very hungry.

Now the stork had prepared a thick soup that she served in jars that were very tall and thin, just right for her long beak.